THE LETTER TO THE FATHER

Proposed Actor: Adrien Brody as Franz Kafka (unattached)

---

The Role

Franz Kafka. Age 29–40 across the film. Insurance bureaucrat, insomniac writer, terminally ashamed son. A man who understood systems better than anyone and could not escape any of them; who could make an institution say exactly what happened to a worker and could not make his own father read a letter. Brilliant, dryly funny, physically fragile, emotionally avoidant, vain in humiliatingly human ways, and capable of tenderness he can barely survive. The role demands sustained physical transformation, silence that carries enormous weight, and the ability to make thought, shame, wit, bureaucratic precision, and self-betrayal visible in real time.

Why This Is the Brody Role

This is not generic casting. This is structural. What Brody does — inwardness, physical fragility, micro-expression over rhetoric, strength as endurance rather than dominance — is precisely what Kafka demands. No other working actor combines these qualities at this level. The physical parallels (angular features, enormous expressive eyes, the capacity to convey both intelligence and vulnerability simultaneously) are uncanny. The temperamental parallels are precise.

Following The Brutalist, this represents the natural apex of a career-best arc: the role that demands everything and rewards it with the most psychologically rich character Brody has ever inhabited.

Performance Gravity

Six major Oscar-clip scenes. Multiple extended passages of minimal dialogue where the performance lives entirely in the face and body. A physical deterioration arc (healthy to terminal) that is tasteful but visible. Emotional range spanning dry comedy, social terror, public competence, romantic tenderness across three sharply different relationships, philosophical combat with Brod, and spiritual clarity. This is a role that lets the actor play both the man who can make an institution tell the truth and the man who cannot make his own father read a letter.

Awards Viability

Illustrative Best Actor positioning. The campaign narrative — from The Pianist through years of underuse to a late-career renaissance culminating in the definitive performance — is the strongest possible awards-season framing. Venice premiere target. Full Oscar campaign.

The Project

Budget: $12–18M. Period drama, primarily Prague-based (Czech tax incentive). Illustrative director shortlist; no director attachment or producer interest confirmed. Fully developed screenplay and studio package available.

Key Scenes for Consideration

The Elevator: Kafka waits for an elevator. The door closes without him. Three minutes, virtually no dialogue, a metaphysical event carried entirely by performance. — The Engagement Dinner: Kafka smiles through a family dinner that plays like a courtroom. The smile never wavers. Something behind it collapses. — The Letter Returns: years after writing it, Kafka receives the undelivered Letter to His Father back in Berlin and must sit with the fact that it completed its round trip without leaving the family. — Burn Everything: with Brod, Kafka argues that unfinished work belongs to the writer, not the world. Friendship scene, philosophical duel, and self-sentencing at once. — The Final Notes: Kafka cannot speak. Communicates by handwritten slips. “No fear now.”
