THE LEDGER ROOM

Distributor Pitch

Audience promise An adult institutional drama with dry humor and an unusual central pair: the archivist who can stop a closure, and the courier whose livelihood depends on it being completed. The hook is practical; the emotional outcome is a truthfully finished job that still costs both workers.

Positioning Competence, labor and contested memory rather than an identified-villain conspiracy. Ina's refusal and Bea's loss of representative control distinguish the film from a clean whistleblower story. The apparent paperwork mystery becomes a relationship conflict with concrete housing and employment consequences.

Release questions Actual running time, finished-film tone, cast, territory and rights will determine whether curated theatrical, festival-led or another release is appropriate. A discussion program could add context, but no partner, bookings or audience commitments exist.

Request Read the screenplay for audience clarity and sustained attention, not as evidence of delivery readiness. This is a generated development draft. No distributor has been approached, no comparable commercial performance is asserted and no release window is reserved.
