THE LEDGER ROOM

Press Information Draft

Description The Ledger Room is an original screenplay about a municipal archivist and a temporary courier whose futures depend on closing the same records depot. A pasted housing-settlement column leads them into a dispute that includes the archivist's old unchecked certification and the courier's own privacy breach.

Truthful angle A practical task completed on time can still leave workers and residents worse off. The film's imagined climax is a received consignment and an exception-status return, followed by unresolved claims, a lost permanent job and a held payment. No public exposure solves the town.

Current status AI-authored revised demonstration draft, not a produced film. All people, places, institutions and civic procedures are invented. No cast, director, financing, festival selection, reviews or release date attached. No real case is being dramatized or alleged.

Use of this sheet Background draft for a later production, requiring updated verified credits and production facts before circulation. No interviews, quotes, endorsements or publicity access are invented. Nothing in this package has been sent to press.
