THE LEDGER ROOM

Cultural Partnership Pitch

Possible collaboration A completed fictional film about archives, work and consent could support a discussion with an archive, library, labor group or community arts organization. The useful question is not whether records matter, but who can make a correction and who pays for making it.

Mutual benefit A partner could shape a paid consultation or later moderated event using its own expertise. The production could provide accessible screening materials and a clear account of what the film invents. Neither side should be required to endorse the other's claims.

Boundaries in the story and partnership Ina refuses to become evidence for an organizer's project; that boundary should govern actual engagement too. Do not recruit real residents to authenticate an invented allegation. Do not extract personal stories for publicity without specific consent and terms.

Next step An exploratory conversation only after a real producer and resources exist. No organization is attached, approached or represented as interested. Events, compensation, accessibility and permissions would be concrete agreements, not assumptions created by this pitch.
